

The William's Taxonomy Battle Plans

Cut out the strips below and allow students to draw or choose the "battle plans" that they choose to complete. The number of activities that will be completed is your choice.

Fluency: 3 pats of butter

Make a list of the ways that the Yooks and Zooks could have avoided the weapon building entirely.

Flexibility: 6 pats of butter

Create your own Dr. Seuss picture book, using another event in history as the theme.

Curiosity: 5 pats of butter

What questions would you ask the leaders of the Cold War if you were to meet them? What about the Yooks and Zooks?

Imagination: 5 pats of butter

Imagine that you are a mediator between the Yooks and Zooks. What compromises could you make to avoid destruction of their worlds?

Risk Taking: 5 pats of butter

People who lived during the Cold War grew up in fear of bombs. Many people built underground shelters, and children went through drills in school in case of a bombing. How would you feel if you had to do that? Create a diary entry of your thoughts and feelings if you had lived during the Cold War.

Bloom's Taxonomy Cube Activities for Oh, The Places You'll Go

Knowledge What things did Dr. Seuss say you would encounter in life? Create a "Life" Ad of places you'll go.	*Comprehension Use the T-Chart to compare Dr. Seuss's places to what the real meanings are. For example, what is the meaning of the prickly perch? Your teacher will have a sheet to help you with this.
Application How did Dr. Seuss make you feel? Did he teach you anything with this book? Create a mural of ways this book relates to you.	*Analysis Dr. Seuss used this book as an analogy for the future. What do you think he is telling you? Create an advice column from him to the youth. Use the sheet your teacher has for this activity.
Synthesis Create a map of all the places you feel you will go in your life. They do not have to all be real places, they can be more abstract too.	Evaluation Is this book better for young reader or older readers? Write a review, stating who this book is for. Be sure to defend your thinking.
